When she went to her grandmother's birthday party, Cathy Jean expected it to be like any other family event. Long and boring. While she always looked forward to seeing her cousin, Patty, she hated the long drive to the country. Nothing to see for miles except farmland, the occasional cow and highway. Give her the city with its lights, traffic and best of all, no cows. And she definitely didn't plan on busting her tire. Ugh. And as if Fate hadn't thrown enough curve balls at her, she couldn't even get the damn tire loose. Then he offered to help. And she refused. Who cared if he had muscles on top of muscles? Who cared about that dimple that popped out in his cheek when he smiled? And Cathy Jean sure didn't notice that his eyes were dark as chocolate. None of that mattered because he'd called her little lady and to a city girl, those were fighting words. So when her cousin convinced her to go on a blind date, Cathy Jean was surprised to find the cowboy who helped her change her tire would also be her first and only one night stand? Who knew Camaro's were so hot?
