Traveling Back in Time Letitia Hicks

Imagine stepping back in time to a world without cell phones—a world where acquiring food is not a matter of money but of labor. This world exists, in Traveling Back in Time. When James leaves the city for Horseshoe Farm, an isolated farm in a small, rural community, he feels at first like he has stepped off the planet. For the first time, he is unable to communicate instantly with his friends, because there is no cell signal. There are only three channels on the television, and the other kids play outside instead of playing video games. And yet, James has the experience of a lifetime as he learns how to grow food and have fun in a rural setting.
