The New Communist Manifesto Ianko Stoianov

Never was a modern communist ideology more needed indeed, and never was it more lacking; an ideology, which is capable of inspiring the present and future generations, an ideology of the new Renaissance of humanity. This new ideology must be realistic, pragmatic and implementable in order to be successful and working. But an ideology is successful and working only when it is true and expresses the absolute ends of Man.

The aim of the New Communist Manifesto is to provide the theory and the vision, which the world of today needs; it is the newest humanistic answer of the eternal questions about freedom, power and justice. It is a great merit of modern humanism that it has come to the point to create a new revolutionary ideology and become a world-historic force capable of inspiring the activists of the humanist anti-capitalist revolution willing to take part in the political fight for power and win.

The humanists – the modern Realcommunists – feel the enormous need for publishing and propagating a book which does not only completely present their ideology but is also absolutely capable of exerting the same tremendous influence on its own epoch and all following epochs as Marx's Communist Manifesto used to.

The newest Realcommunist movement is bound to support a brand new kind of anti-utopian post-Marxist communism. This new communism has little in common with the utopian Marxist doctrine of communism; the truth of communism was not and could not have been revealed by Marx alone. Unlike the abstract Marx's communism, post-Marxist Realcommunism is based on the whole development of humanity before and after Marx; it decisively breaks with the world of Utopia and Marx's abstract ideal communism.
