We're All Gonna Die! (mortality as an ally) Nelson Buzz Kellogg

"Pay attention to the present moment." You have probably heard this advice if you have embarked on a meditation practice. Sound counsel in a world filled with distractions, but not enough to help create a satisfying mortality--a life story one can fully and fondly own.

To live a good story requires a deeper understanding of the life paths presented by the modern world. Where did our means and methods for earning a living come from? When is a technology a tool, and when do we become tools of technology? Is it possible to locate these questions and their answers in narratives of personal and social meaning without resorting to any system of religious dogma as a necessary postulate?

We move toward such a place in this wide-ranging and conversational book. And perhaps, as the style of prose intends, you will find yourself laughing at some of life's absurdities along the way.
