James, a UK based chef, has tried to make a career with EAT-TV, but his womanizing ways aren't what they're looking for with their wholesome family style image. However, the producers of a new reality show about single life, The Fixer Upper, think he's perfect. Against his wishes his agent convinces him to give it a shot. His overpriced bachelor pad is needing a mortgage payment, and he needs a job to support the tween-aged daughter that's recently been dumped in his lap.

Margaret Dumas is control freak who has micromanaged her marriage to shambles. When she makes a deal with her mother to quit fixing her up if she'll do this new reality show, she thinks she's won. No more blind dates, no more friendly advice, no more "chance meetings" with her Mother's friends' sons. The only catch is she's got to go on detestable reality television and expose her dating habits to a total stranger who is supposed to "fix" her and make her a dating machine. As if.

When Margaret meets James, they clash on the surface, but deep down they recognize something in the other that they want. Redemption.
